

HE'S USING THE KIDS AGAINST YOU.

He is not just talking shit.

He is rewiring your children's memories of you.

One lie at a time until they look at you like a stranger.

READ THIS TWICE

He has turned the children you grew inside your body into weapons aimed at your heart. Not because the divorce is messy. Because he wants you erased. You hear it when they say 'Dad said you don't want us' in the same voice that used to call you Mommy at 3 a.m. It is not confusion. It is a campaign.

The worst part is no one sees the murder happening in slow motion. They say 'kids always pick a side' like it is natural. Like you are supposed to accept that the man who once held your hand while you pushed is now teaching them to hate the sound of your name.

Stop asking what you did wrong. He is doing this on purpose. And the longer you stay quiet trying to be the 'bigger person,' the more of them he steals.

THE INVISIBLE WAR

The specific ways he is using them

Mothers say the same things over and over because the playbook is the same. Tick what you recognize. This is not 'high conflict.' This is him using your kids as soldiers.

- Tells them you left them or chose someone else over them
- Coaches them to repeat 'I don't want to see her' like it was their idea
- Uses the kids to deliver messages and guilt ('Mommy said she hates you')
- Makes up new 'rules' the second you get any time with them
- Tells them you are dangerous, crazy, or going to hurt them
- Rewards them for rejecting you and punishes contact with you
- Says you don't pay support or don't care even when you do
- Intercepts every card, gift, and call so they think you vanished
- Tells them court documents and lies about you as 'proof'
- Makes them choose between loving him and loving you

THE PATTERN

If three or more of these are happening, he is not 'just venting.' He is systematically cutting you out of their lives while smiling for the judge.

THE LIES THEY REPEAT

The exact words that gut you

These are not made up. These are the sentences mothers hear from their own children after time with him. Write down every one your kids say. Date it. This is evidence of the poison.

- "Dad said you hit him and that's why we can't see you."
- "You don't love us. Dad said you left because you found a new family."
- "Dad said you're dangerous and we shouldn't be alone with you."
- "I don't want to come. Dad said you'll just make me sad."
- "Dad said you don't pay for anything and we have to live like this because of you."
- "Grandma said you were never a good mom anyway."
- "Dad said if I love you it means I don't love him."
- "You lied to the judge. Dad showed us the papers."

SAY THIS

"I hear what your father told you. Those things are not true. I am still your mother and I love you. I will not fight with you about his lies."

BUILD THE RECORD

Make it impossible for him to lie about the lies

He counts on you being too emotional to document. Stop being emotional in the record. Be boring, specific, and relentless.

- Every time the kids repeat a lie, write the exact words, the date, what they said right before and after. No commentary. Just facts.
- Screenshot every message where he uses the kids as messengers. Save them in a folder called 'Weaponization.'
- If he changes pickup times or makes up rules, text only: 'Per our agreement I will pick up at 5. Confirm.' Screenshot his reply or lack of it.
- Tell one safe adult (not on his side) what is happening. Get it in writing that they have witnessed the change in the kids.
- If he withholds the kids, send one calm message through the app or lawyer: 'I am available for my court-ordered time. Please advise.' Do not beg.
- Keep a private list of every holiday, birthday, and event he blocked or poisoned. Judges notice patterns.

THE RULE

If it is not in writing, it did not happen. If it happened to the kids, it goes in the record.

THE HARD BOUNDARY

What to say when they come at you with his words

Soft language teaches them the poison works. These are not gentle. They are clear. Say them once, then stop explaining.

SAY THIS

When they say 'Dad said you don't love us': 'I love you. Your father is lying to you to hurt me. I am not going to argue with you about it. I am here when you want the truth.'

SAY THIS

When they refuse to come: 'I will not force you to see me while your father is feeding you lies. I love you. The door is open when you are ready to hear my side.'

SAY THIS

When they repeat a lie about money or court: 'Those are things your father told you. They are not true. I will not discuss adult lies with you. Ask me about something real.'

SAY THIS

When he uses them to deliver guilt: 'Tell your father to text me himself. I do not take messages through my children.'

SAY THIS

When they say they hate you: 'I know that feels real right now. Your father has put a lot of work into making you feel that way. I still love you. That does not change.'

WHEN THEY REJECT YOU

The specific grief of being a stranger to your own child

It is not just missing them. It is watching them look at you with eyes he filled with contempt. It is hearing your own child use the exact tone he uses when he wants to hurt you.

You will want to collapse in the car after drop-off. You will want to text him every ugly truth. Do not. That is what he is waiting for. Every time you react, he wins another story to tell them.

- The child who just looked at you like you are the enemy is still the child you sang to in the dark. He is trying to make you forget that.
- Your job is not to make them love you today. Your job is to stay the person they can come back to when the lies stop working.
- He is betting they will never question him. Your steadiness is the proof they will eventually need.
- You are allowed to grieve the version of motherhood he stole. You are not allowed to let him steal the version you still have left.

PROTECT THE THREAD

Small, quiet ways to stay connected when they are being tu

Big gestures give him ammunition. Small, consistent ones give them a different story of you.

- One short, boring text a week through the app. No emotion. 'Thinking of you. Love you.' He can show it to them or not. The record stays clean.
- Buy them one small thing they actually like and leave it with the exchange person. No note that can be twisted.
- When you do have them, do not spend the whole time defending yourself. Make one normal memory. Pancakes. A walk. A stupid joke. He cannot erase that as easily.
- Keep every photo, drawing, and card they ever gave you. When they are older, those will matter more than his stories.
- If they are old enough, one calm letter they can read later: 'I know things feel confusing. I am still here. I love you. No matter what he says.'

THE RULE

Every time you refuse to turn the visit into a war zone, you give them one more reason to doubt the story he is selling.

THE LONG GAME

Why it feels hopeless and why you keep going anyway

He is counting on you giving up. On the silence and the rejection eventually breaking you so completely that you stop showing up. That is when he has won for good.

The children he is turning against you are still children. One day the lies will have to compete with their own memories and the evidence you kept. Your job is to still be standing when that day comes.

You are not crazy. You are not a bad mother. You are a mother whose ex decided the children were the most effective way to keep hurting you. That is on him. Your only job is to refuse to disappear.

TONIGHT

Write down the three worst lies your children have repeated in the last month. Date them. Put them in the folder. That is one more piece of the truth they will need.

If this is escalating to threats, false allegations, or you fear for the children, get a lawyer who understands p

He is betting they will never question him.

Every lie he plants is a bet against your persistence. You are the one who keeps showing up with clean records, calm boundaries, and the truth they can return to. The woman he tried to erase from their story is still here. And the children will eventually need the version of you he could not destroy.

You are not the enemy they were taught. You are the mother who refused to vanish.