The Money Reset

Another paycheck. Still broke.

A 15-minute reset to get clarity — for the woman who's tired of money stress.

START HERE

You're not bad with money. You're flying blind.

Money stress is rarely about how much you make. It's about not knowing — what's coming, what's due, what's actually left. That fog is exhausting, and it keeps you up at night.

This isn't a budget that shames you. It's a 15-minute reset that hands you a clear picture, so the panic has somewhere to go.

THE GOAL TODAY

Not to be rich by Friday. Just to know your numbers — because you can't calm down about money you can't see.

STEP 1

Your true number

Forget your bank balance for a second — it lies, because money is already promised to bills. Here's what you actually have to work with until your next paycheck:

Money in the bank now _____

– Bills due before next payday _____

= Your TRUE number _____

*This number — not your balance — is the truth. Write it on your hand if you have to.
Decisions get easy when you know it.*

STEP 2

The 7-day leak audit

The money doesn't vanish — it leaks, $6 and $11 at a time. Write down every dollar that leaves for 7 days. No judging. Just see it.

Day	What I spent on	Amount
Mon
Tue
Wed
Thu
Fri
Sat
Sun

THE LEAK YOU'LL FIND

For almost everyone it's the same: small, mindless, repeat purchases. Not lattes — the auto-renew you forgot, the delivery fees, the "treat" that happens daily. Cut one. That's your raise.

STEP 3

The no-surprise bill map

Half of money stress is being ambushed by a bill. Map them once, never be surprised again. Write each bill on the day it hits.

Bill	Day of month	Amount	Auto-pay?

STEP 4

The $20 cushion

The thing that ends money panic isn't a raise — it's a buffer. Even a tiny one. Start one this week with whatever you can spare.

- Pick an amount you won't miss: $5, $10, $20 a week.
- Move it the day you get paid — before it disappears.
- Different account or envelope. Out of sight.
- Do not touch it unless it's a true emergency.

My cushion plan:

I'll move _____ every _____ into _____.

A $300 cushion changes everything. It turns "disaster" into "annoying." That's the whole game.

The money-panic protocol

When the 2 a.m. dread comes, you don't need to solve everything. Run this:

- Stop. The fear is not new information. Breathe out slowly, twice.
- Look at your true number (Step 1). The real picture is almost always less scary than the fog.
- Pick ONE action for tomorrow. One. Write it down.
- Put it down till morning. Nothing financial gets fixed at 2 a.m. anyway.

SAY THIS

"Being stressed about money tonight does not make me bad at money. I have a plan, and I'll work it in the daylight."

Money stress is not a character flaw.

It's a math problem with a solution — and now you can see it. Know your number. Move your cushion. Breathe. You've got this, one paycheck at a time.
